

MySpace Predators - How to Help Kids Avoid Them

Contributed by Administrator
Tuesday, 05 December 2006

When it comes to the latest and greatest on the internet, the new rage is MySpace. This is a site where people from all over the world can connect with each other via the web. As opposed to an instant messaging program, MySpace allows the user to post pictures as well as detailed information.

But just like anything else on the internet, MySpace comes along with safety problems as well. No matter how many people try to stop internet predators they keep showing up time and time again. And this is especially true when it comes to MySpace.

The best way to avoid MySpace predators is by never getting too involved with anybody until you know exactly what they are about. In other words, don't give anybody your contact information unless you know for 100% positive that they are trustworthy. Remember, if nobody has your contact information they can never get a hold of you. And to take this a step further, if somebody is harassing you through the MySpace site, contact the administrators right away and turn them onto the problem. If this gets you nowhere and you feel in danger, there is nothing wrong with contacting your local police department.

Overall, avoid MySpace predators is not something that should be hard to do. Even though MySpace is different than other forms of internet communication, you should still be able to use the same basic knowledge to avoid any problems. Keep your contact information confidential, and you should be able to have a great time on MySpace.

About The Author Scott Hendison - Editor, WebSafeKid.Com

<http://www.websafekid.com> is designed to help parents, kids and teens with internet safety, and learn how to protect their privacy and security online and to teach responsible internet use.